Become a powerful agent for change

Drive innovation in education through transformational leadership

Leadership and Learning are the foundation for change in an increasingly complex environment with social, cultural, economic, and political influences at play. Leaders who are armed with professional experience and up-to-date knowledge of these forces can contribute to the ever-evolving fields of study in education, business, community, and social and behavioral health services.

Our online program is designed for working professionals who hold a master's degree and have an interest in advancing their knowledge of learning based on research about human growth and development, the approaches and practices that enhance the creation of learning environments within organizations, and the ways to facilitate real change in a leadership role.

Choose Rivier and Earn Your Degree in Three Years

The Doctor of Education (Ed.D.) in Leadership and Learning is designed to enable students to complete their coursework online in three years, while simultaneously beginning their dissertation in the first year and conducting original research on a topic of local, regional, and national significance. The program is structured to allow students to engage in doctoral study while maintaining their current employment, to develop their career goals, meet their personal aspirations, and expand their professional networks.

Doctor of Education in Leadership and Learning

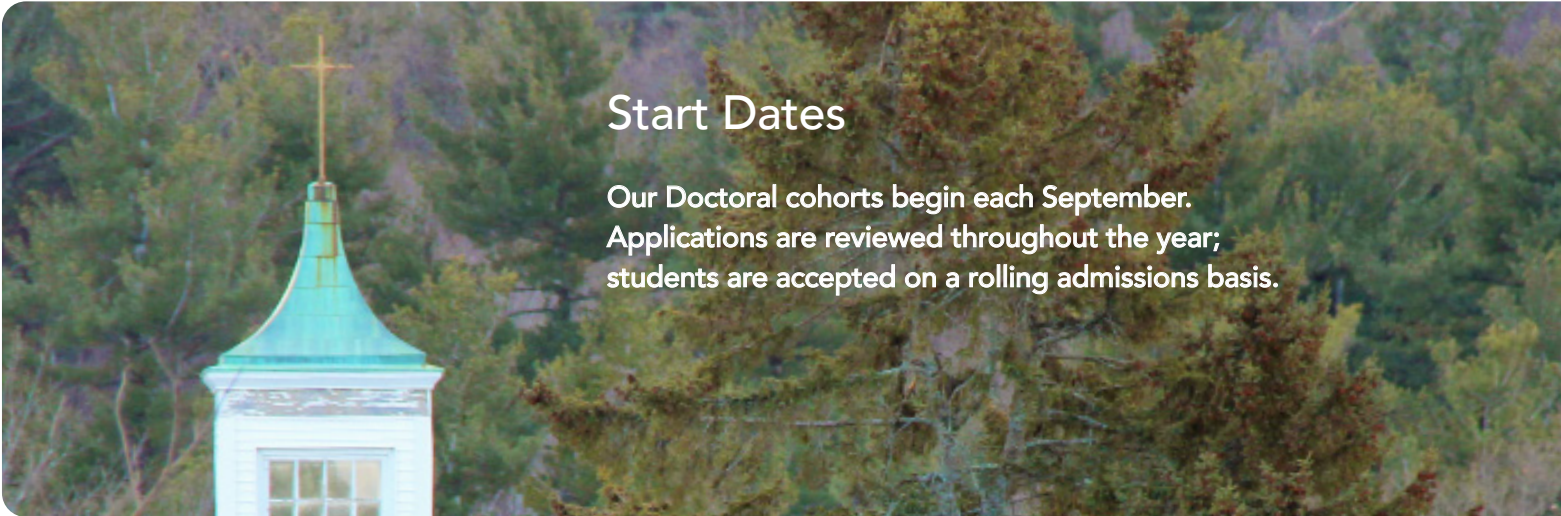

The Doctor of Education (Ed.D.) at Rivier University extends research on what is known about leadership and learning to professionals in the social sciences; applied fields of social service, healthcare, and counseling; and for training and development within organizations, institutions, and systems. In our program, you will:

- Extend the ongoing conversation about leadership and learning to many disciplines and fields of study, to identify what is common in our knowledge, experiences, and practices;
- Engage with professionals from the counseling professions in the discussion of leadership and learning;
- Enable professionals to contribute new theories, models, and constructs of teaching and learning to create enlightened programs and services;
- Conduct research on human growth and development, learning, and the nature of help and support in a variety of disciplines and professions in order to formulate an informed understanding of the nature of change.

Course Sequence

By following the course sequence below, you will be able to complete your Ed.D. in three years. In addition to the seven-week, three-credit courses below (totaling 48 credits), you will register for one on-campus experience each year (one credit each), bringing your total credits for the degree to 51. These three Friday–Saturday visits are intended to promote faculty–student communication on doctoral study. The first-year visit will include a Doctoral Studies Orientation in September.

Our Alumni are Innovators in their Fields

Dr. Lisa Dias, Ed.D. Class of 2016

Head of School, World Academy

Dr. Lisa Dias pursued her Ed.D. at Rivier University while working full-time. She considers her doctoral studies one of her greatest achievements.

"I chose to further my education in order to be the most effective leader I could be; the professors at Rivier taught me how to think dynamically and critically."

Michael McCutcheon, Ed.D. Class of 2018

Patrol Sergeant and Owner,
Forensic Education, LLC

Dr. Michael McCutcheon already had a distinguished career as a patrol sergeant when he entered the Ed.D. program. He earned his doctorate to become a professional educator and to share his knowledge with future generations of police officers. Earning his doctorate has opened doors to a second career, incorporating the work that he loves.

"The doctoral program allowed me to grow as an instructor and a leader."

Our Distinguished Faculty

You will be taught and mentored by faculty who are widely recognized both regionally and nationally as experts in the field of education.
